Reading

K. Read the following text and answer the questions.

Knowing what information you can get from dictionaries and how to use it is one of important skills that every English language learner should know. A dictionary, sometimes known as a wordbook, is a collection of words in one or more specific languages, often arranged alphabetically, which may include information on definitions, usage, etymologies, pronunciations, translation, etc. or a book of words in one language with their equivalents in another, sometimes known as a lexicon.

To be a good dictionary user it is not enough to know what to use the dictionary for. You must also decide which is the best dictionary for any of the purposes that you have. As well as this, you need to be able to find what you are looking for quickly; you need to be sure that you have found what you were looking for; and, most importantly, you need to know when to use your dictionary.

If you look up every new word you see, you will spend your whole day with the dictionary in your hand. You have to be clever and choose the right words to check and the right time to do it. When you find a new word while reading, finish the sentence (better: the paragraph). If you haven't guessed the meaning and it still seems important, then you can look it up. To avoid interrupting your reading for too long, you should find its meaning in your own language using a bilingual dictionary.
